Introduction and User's Guide

This catalog series is designed to serve the needs of both the novice and advanced collectors. It provides a comprehensive guide to over 500 years of German State coinage. It is generally arranged so that persons with no more than a basic knowledge of history and a casual acquaintance with coin collecting can consult it with confidence and ease. The following explanations summarize the general practices used in preparing this catalog's listings. However, because of specialized requirements, these must not be considered ironclad. Where these standards have been set aside, appropriate notations of the variations are incorporated in that particular listing.

ARRANGEMENT

The German States are arranged alphabetically except for the Saxe- breakdowns, which are treated cronologically. There is a lisiting of that order at the begining of the section, and it is handled in the Issuer Index. Political changes or separate issuing authorities within a state are arranged chronologically.

Diverse coinage types relating to fabrication methods, re-evaluations, denomination systems, non-circulating categories and such have been identified, separated and arranged in logical fashion. Chronological arrangement is employed for most circulating coinage, i.e., Hammered coinage will normally precede Milled coinage, monetary reforms will flow in order of their institution. Non-circulating types such as Essais, Pieforts, Patterns, and Trial Strikes will follow the main listings, as will Token coinage.

Within a coinage type coins will be listed by denomination, from smallest to largest. Numbered types within a denomination will be ordered by their first date of issue.

IDENTIFICATION

The most important step in the identification of a coin is the determination of the State of Origin. This is often presented as an abbreviated Latin name of the state, after the name of the ruler. It may also appear just as a gouping of initials. In some cases, only through the familiarity of the monarchical portraits, symbols and legends or indication of currency system are they identifiable.

To assist in identification of the state, we have asembled the Instant Identifier section to provide a point of beginning for collectors by allowing them to compare unidentified coins with photographic details from typical issues.

We also suggest reference to the comprehensive State and Issuer Index.

DATING

Coin dating is the another basic attribution consideration. Here, the problem can be more difficult because the reading of a coin date is subject to a specific time period. Early coins are often dated in two or three digits. 56 and 656, are often seen for 1656. Roman numerals are sometimes incorporated, thus MDCLVI for 1656 is on the coin.

The date actually carried on a given coin is generally cataloged here in the first column (Date). Dates listed alone in the date column which do not actually appear on a given coin, or dates which are known, but do not appear on the coin, are generally enclosed by parentheses with 'ND' at the left, for example ND(1926).

Countermarked Coinage is presented with both 'Countermark Date' and 'Host Coin' date for each type. Actual date representation follows the rules outlined above.

NUMBERING SYSTEM

Some catalog numbers assigned in this volume are based on established references. This practice has been observed for two reasons: First, when world coins are listed chronologically they are basically self-cataloging; second, there was no need to confuse collectors with totally new numeric designations where appropriate systems already existed. As time progressed we found many of these established systems incomplete and inadequate and have now replaced many with KM prefix numbers for post 1601 dated coins and MB prefix numbers for pre-1600 dated coins. When numbers change appropriate cross-referencing has been provided.

Some of the coins listed in this catalog are identified or cross-referenced by numbers assigned by R.S. Yeoman (Y#), or slight adaptations thereof, in his Modern World Coins, and Current Coins of the World. For the pre-Yeoman dated issues, the numbers assigned by William D. Craig (C#) in his Coins of the World (1750-1850 period), 3rd edition, have been applied.

DENOMINATIONS

Another basic consideration to be met in the attribution of a coin is the determination of denomination. Since denominations are usually expressed in numeric, rather than word form on a coin, this is usually quite easily accomplished on coins. Coins listed in this volume are generally illustrated in actual size. Where size is critical to proper attribution, the coin's millimeter size is indicated.

In many cases we have listed both the official denomination, and slag terms or equivelants.

Determination of a coin's currency system can also be valuable in attributing the issue to its country of origin.

MINTAGES

Quantities minted of each date are indicated where that information is available and sometimes rounded off to the nearest 10,000 pieces. On quantities of a few thousand or less, actual mintages are generally indicated. For combined mintage figures the abbreviation "Inc. Above" means Included Above, while "Inc. Below" means Included Below.

MINT AND PRIVY MARKS

The presence of distinctive, but frequently inconspicuously placed, mint marks indicates the mint of issue for many of the coins listed in this catalog. An appropriate designation in the date listings notes the presence, if any, of a mint mark on a particular coin type by incorporating the letter or letters of the mint mark adjoining the date, i.e., 1883CC or 1890H.

The presence of mint and/or mintmaster's privy marks on a coin in non-letter form is indicated by incorporating the mint letter in lower case within parentheses adjoining the date; i.e. 1827(a). The corresponding mark is illustrated or identified in the introduction of the corresponding German locale.

Where listings incorporate mintmaster initials, they are always presented in capital letters separated from the date by one character space; i.e., 1850 MF. The different mint mark and mintmaster letters found on the coins of any country, state or city of issue are always shown at the beginning of listings.

METALS

Each numbered type listing will contain a description of the coins metallic content. The traditional coinage metals and their symbolic chemical abbreviations sometimes used in this catalog are:

Platinum - (PT)	Copper - (Cu)
Gold - (Au)	Brass -
Silver - (Ag)	Copper-nickel- (CN)
Billion -	Lead - (Pb)
Nickel - (Ni)	Steel -
Zinc - (Zn)	Tin - (Sn)
Bronze - (Ae)	Aluminum - (Al)

During the 18th and 19th centuries, most of the world's coins were struck of copper or bronze, silver and gold. Commencing in the early years of the 20th century, however, numerous new coinage metals, primarily non-precious metal alloys, were introduced. Gold has not been widely used for circulation coinages since World War I, although silver remained a popular coinage metal in most parts of the world until after World War II. With the disappearance of silver for circulation coinage, numerous additional compositions were introduced for coinage applications.

OFF-METAL STRIKES

Off-metal strikes coinage struck in other than their officially authorized compositions, have been incorporated into Pattern listings.

Collectors of Germanic coinage may be familiar with the term "Abschlag" which quickly identifies similar types of coinage.

PRECIOUS METAL WEIGHTS

Listings of weight, fineness and actual silver (ASW), gold (AGW), platinum or palladium (APW) content of most machine-struck coins are provided in this edition. This information will be found incorporated in each separate type listing, along with other data related to the coin.

The ASW, AGW and APW figures were determined by multiplying the gross weight of a given coin by its known or tested fineness and converting the resulting gram or grain weight to troy ounces, rounded to the nearest ten-thousandth of an ounce. A silver coin with a 24.25-gram weight and .875 fineness for example, would have a fine weight of approximately 21.2188 grams, or a .6822 ASW, a factor that can be used to accurately determine the intrinsic value for multiple examples.

The ASW, AGW or APW figure can be multiplied by the spot price of each precious metal to determine the current intrinsic value of any coin accompanied by these designations.

Coin weights are indicated in grams (abbreviated "g") along with fineness where the information is of value in differentiating between types. These weights are based on 31.103 grams per troy (scientific) ounce, as opposed to the avoirdupois (commercial) standard of 28.35 grams. Actual coin weights are generally shown in hundredths or thousandths of a gram; i.e., 2.9200 g., SILVER, 0.500 oz.

WEIGHTS AND FINENESSES

As the silver and gold bullion markets have advanced and declined sharply in recent years, the fineness and total precious metal content of coins has become especially significant where bullion coins - issues which trade on the basis of their intrinsic metallic content rather than numismatic value - are concerned. In many instances, such issues have become worth more in bullion form than their nominal collector values or denominations indicate.

Establishing the weight of a coin can also be valuable for determining its denomination. Actual weight is also necessary to ascertain the specific gravity of the coin's metallic content, an important factor in determining authenticity.

TROY WEIGHT STANDARDS

24 Grains = 1 Pennyweight
480 Grains = 1 Ounce
31.103 Grams = 1 Ounce

UNIFORM WEIGHTS

15.432 Grains = 1 Gram
0.0648 Gram = 1 Grain

AVOIRDUPOIS STANDARDS

27-11/32 Grains = 11 Dram
437-1/2 Grains = 1 Ounce
28.350 Grams = 1 Ounce

COUNTERMARKS/COUNTERSTAMPS

There is some confusion among collectors over the terms "countermark" and "counterstamp" when applied to a coin bearing an additional mark or change of design and/or denomination.

To clarify, a countermark might be considered similar to the "hall mark" applied to a piece of silverware, by which a silversmith assured the quality of the piece. In the same way, a countermark assures the quality of the coin on which it is placed, as, for example, when a 3 or 4 in an oval is struck onto a Brunswick-Lüneburg multiple Thaler.

Countermarks are generally applied singularly and in most cases indiscriminately on either side of the "host" coin. See the listings in the Franconian Circle.

Counterstamped coins are more extensively altered. The counterstamping is done with a set of dies, rather than a hand punch. The coin being counterstamped is placed between the new dies and struck as if it were a blank planchet.

PHOTOGRAPHS

To assist the reader in coin identification, every effort has been made to present actual size photographs of every coinage type listed. All coins up to 55mm are illustrated actual size, to the nearest 1/2mm up to 25mm, and to the nearest 1mm thereafter. Coins larger than 55mm diameter are illustrated in reduced size, with the actual size noted in the descriptive text block.

VALUATIONS

Values quoted in this catalog represent the current market and are compiled from recommendations provided and verified through various source documents and specialized consultants. It should be stressed, however, that this book is intended to serve only as an aid for evaluating coins. Actual market conditions are constantly changing and additional influences, such as particularly strong local demand for certain coin series, fluctuation of international exchange rates and worldwide collection patterns must also be considered. Publication of this catalog is not intended as a solicitation by the publisher, editors or contributors to buy or sell the coins listed at the prices indicated.

All valuations are stated in U.S. dollars, based on careful assessment of the varied international collector market. Valuations for coins priced below $100.00 are generally stated in full amounts - i.e. 37.50 or 95.00 - while valuations at or above that figure are rounded off in even dollars - i.e. $125.00 is expressed 125. A comma is added to indicate thousands of dollars in value.

It should be noted that when particularly select uncirculated or proof-like examples of uncirculated coins become available they can be expected to command proportionately high premiums. Such examples in reference to choice Germanic Thalers are referred to as "erst schlage" or first strikes.

TOKEN COINAGE

At times local economic conditions have forced regular coinage from circulation or found mints unable to cope with the demand for coinage, giving rise to privately issued token coinage substitutes. German Colonial emergency emissions of the World War I era are examples of such tokens being freely accepted in monetary transactions over wide areas.

This catalog includes introductory or detailed listings with "Tn" prefixes of many token coinage issues, particularly those which enjoyed wide circulation and where the series was limited in diversity. More complex series, and those more restricted in scope of circulation are generally not listed.

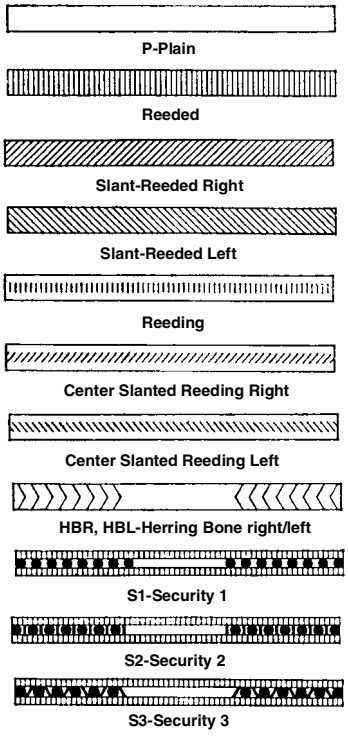
MEDALLIC ISSUES

Medallic issues can be found in the 5th edition of Unusual World Coins, Krause Publications, a division of F+W Media, Inc.

RESTRIKES, COUNTERFEITS

Deceptive restrike and counterfeit (both contemporary and modern) examples exist of some coin issues. Where possible, the existence of restrikes is noted. Warnings are also incorporated in instances where particularly deceptive counterfeits are known to exist. Collectors who are uncertain about the authenticity of a coin held in their collection, or being offered for sale, should take the precaution of having it authenticated by a recognized third-party grading service.

EDGE VARIETIES



SETS

Listings in this catalog for specimen, proof and mint sets are for official, government-produced sets. In many instances privately packaged sets also exist.

Mint Sets/Fleur de Coin Sets: Specially prepared by worldwide mints to provide banks, collectors and government dignitaries with examples of business strikes of current coinage.

Specimen Sets: Forerunners of today's proof sets. In most cases the coins were specially struck, perhaps even double struck, to produce a very soft or matte finish on the effigies and fields, along with high, sharp, "wire" rims.

Proof Sets: This is undoubtedly among the most misused terms in the hobby, not only by collectors and dealers, but also by many of the world mints.

A true proof set must be at least double-struck on specially prepared polished planchets and struck using dies (often themselves polished) of the highest quality.

Listings for proof sets in this catalog are for officially issued proof sets so designated by the issuing authority.

It is necessary for collectors to acquire the knowledge to allow them to differentiate true proof sets from would-be proof sets and proof-like sets which may be encountered.

CONDITIONS/GRADING

Wherever possible, coin valuations are given in four or five grades of preservation. For modern commemoratives, which do not circulate, only uncirculated values are usually sufficient. Proof issues are indicated by the word "Proof" next to the date, with valuation proceeded by the word "value" following the mintage. For very recent circulating coins and coins of limited value, one, two or three grade values are presented.

There are almost no grading guides for world coins. What follows is an attempt to help bridge that gap.

In grading world coins, there are two elements to look for: 1) overall wear, and 2) loss of design details, such as strands of hair, feathers on eagles, designs on coats of arms, etc.

The age, rarity or type of a coin should not be a consideration in grading.

Grade each coin by the weaker of the two sides. This method appears to give results most nearly consistent with conservative American Numismatic Association standards for U.S. coins. Split grades, i.e., F/VF for obverse and reverse, respectively, are normally no more than one grade apart. If the two sides are more than one grade apart, the series of coins probably wears differently on each side and should then be graded by the weaker side alone.

Grade by the amount of overall wear and loss of design detail evident on each side of the coin. On coins with a moderately small design element, which is prone to early wear, grade by that design alone. For example, the 5-ore (KM#554) of Sweden has a crown above the monogram on which the beads on the arches show wear most clearly. So, grade by the crown alone.

For Brilliant Uncirculated (BU) grades there will be no visible signs of wear or handling, even under a 30-power microscope. Full mint luster will be present. Ideally no bags marks will be evident.

For Uncirculated (Unc.) grades there will be no visible signs of wear or handling, even under a 30-power microscope. Bag marks may be present.

For Almost Uncirculated (AU), all detail will be visible. There will be wear only on the highest point of the coin. There will often be half or more of the original mint luster present.

On the Extremely Fine (XF or EF) coin, there will be about 95% of the original detail visible. Or, on a coin with a design with no inner detail to wear down, there will be a light wear over nearly all the coin. If a small design is used as the grading area, about 90% of the original detail will be visible. This latter rule stems from the logic that a smaller amount of detail needs to be present because a small area is being used to grade the whole coin.

The Very Fine (VF) coin will have about 75% of the original detail visible. Or, on a coin with no inner detail, there will be moderate wear over the entire coin. Corners of letters and numbers may be weak. A small grading area will have about 66% of the original detail.

For Fine (F), there will be about 50% of the original detail visible. Or, on a coin with no inner detail, there will be fairly heavy wear over all of the coin. Sides of letters will be weak. A typically uncleaned coin will often appear as dirty or dull. A small grading area will have just under 50% of the original detail.

On the Very Good (VG) coin, there will be about 25% of the original detail visible. There will be heavy wear on all of the coin.

The Good (G) coin's design will be clearly outlined but with substantial wear. Some of the larger detail may be visible. The rim may have a few weak spots of wear.

On the About Good (AG) coin, there will typically be only a silhouette of a large design. The rim will be worn down into the letters if any.

Strong or weak strikes, partially weak strikes, damage, corrosion, attractive or unattractive toning, dipping or cleaning should be described along with the above grades. These factors affect the quality of the coin just as do wear and loss of detail, but are easier to describe.

In the case of countermarked/counterstamped coins, the condition of the host coin will have a bearing on the end valuation. The important factor in determining the grade is the condition, clarity and completeness of the countermark itself. This is in reference to countermarks/counterstamps having raised design while being struck in a depression.

Incuse countermarks cannot be graded for wear. They are graded by the clarity and completeness including the condition of the host coin which will also have more bearing on the final grade/valuation determined.

A Brief Overview of German Monetary History

Medieval Beginnings. The origins of German coinage are found in the monetary system of the Carolingian Empire, which was heir to that of the Romans who had struck coins at a number of provincial mints such as Cologne, Trier, Strassburg and Mainz. The Roman system broke down after the termination of that empire and the economy of the early Middle Ages reverted to a non-monetary, barter based society, except in a few scattered urban areas. The Frankish rulers in Western Europe maintained a semblance of the old Roman system, but it was not until the 8th century that increased economic activity made a reform of the currency system necessary. This reform was begun in 755 by Peppin the Short and was put into effect fully about 780-781 by Charlemagne (768-814). The process of introducing the new coinage system was complete by 794. It established the silver penny (denar, from Latin denarius) as the sole circulating currency, of which there were 240 struck to a pound of fine silver. A further denomination, the shilling, equaled twelve pennies and numbered twenty to the silver pound. Only the penny, weighing about 1.3 grams, was struck as an actual coin, the pound (L. libra) and the shilling (L. solidus) used only as units of reckoning.

Charlemagne, 768-814, silver Denar, Melle mint

Charlemagne spent much of his tenure in expanding the size of his empire, often through conquest, but also by sending out priests and bishops in an effort to convert the heathen Slavic peoples of Central and Eastern Europe. In 800, he was crowned emperor in Rome by Pope Leo III (795-816) and by his death in 814, had greatly increased the boundaries of what was now called the Holy Roman Empire. Charlemagne is credited with incorporating the indigenous German rulers of various territories into his government once they had converted to Christianity or disposing of them if they refused to submit. He sent out officials called counts palatine (palatine=of the palace), who had authority to act in his name, to maintain control of the various parts of the Empire in the east. Gradually, the monetary system followed the march of empire and numerous mints were established in important towns as they were acquired.

The absence of a strong hand following Charlemagne's death spelled the end of a unified empire in Western and Central Europe. His grandsons, by agreeing to the division of the Empire as embodied in the Treaty of Verdun in 843, virtually assured the development of two parallel entities which would often be at odds with one another for more than a millennium. Thus, the predecessors of the modern nation-states of France and Germany lay claim to a common founder and equally venerate Charlemagne/Karl der Grosse as the progenitor of their respective countries. It is with the rule of Ludwig II the German (817-876) from 843 then, that Germany, as a geographic concept, can be said to have truly begun. The country underwent many changes and vicissitudes over the centuries before becoming the modern state of our era. Its political and monetary history in all that time is closely intertwined.

Beginning about 836 and extending until around the middle of the 10th century, the mint right was given by the emperor to numerous ecclesiastical entities in exchange for their support of imperial policies. The archbishop of Mainz in 975 was the first feudal lord of the emperor to strike coins with his own portrait in place of that of his overlord. In 1045, the silver mark as a unit of weight (233.7 grams) is first mentioned in the sources. It gradually supplanted the Carolingian pound as the basis for coinage units during the 11th and 12th centuries. The age of the Crusades began in 1096 with the result of coins from many different regions of Europe being circulated widely and a need for calculating their rates of exchange becoming important. This situation also provided the impetus for the development of banks and a banking system to facilitate monetary exchanges and transfers of sums of money without physically transporting large amounts of coins from place to place.

The uniform coinage system came to an end during the 12th and 13th centuries as the central imperial government grew lax, ushering in the period of regional pfennig (penny) production as more members of the petty nobility assumed the mint right. The number of coin issuing entities grew to more than 3,000 during this time as princes were either granted the right to strike coins or assumed it for themselves without imperial sanction. Beginning about 1130, the margraves of Meissen began producing large, thin silver pfennigs with a design only on one side, the other side having an incuse version of the same. Known as bracteats (from Latin bractea = thin metal), they were eventually minted in various places all over the Empire by the end of the 12th century. Also near the end of that century, a new coin – the silver matapan – made its appearance in Venice in 1194 and became one of the forerunners of the groschen.

During the 13th century, a number of developments occurred both within and outside the Empire that had a direct bearing on coinage production. In 1226, Lübeck became the first free imperial city to strike its own coins. About 1230, the town of Hall in Swabia began minting pfennigs of a lighter weight. At first these were called Hallerpfennig, but the name was soon shorted just to haller and eventually became known as the heller, the smallest silver coin as a fraction of the pfennig. As a result of the Crusades, first Italy, and later Germany, saw an influx of gold in quantities larger than at any time since the passing of the Roman Empire. The great sea-going city-states of Venice and Genoa owed their rise to the trade engendered by transporting armies to the Holy Land and returning with the luxuries of the East. Florence introduced the gold florenus in 1252 and Venice the zecchino in 1284, heralding the beginning of what were to become the florin and ducat as internationally accepted coinage. In 1266, the first gros tournois (turnosegroschen) was struck in France, following the lead of the Venetian matapan. Larger than a denier or pfennig, its use was soon adopted in various German localities as the groschen. Following shortly upon the groschen, a smaller silver coin was introduced in the Tyrol in 1271. Called a kreuzer because its principal design incorporated two crosses (kreuze), one superimposed upon the other in the manner of an X over a +, it became one of the most widely used coin denominations in the entire Empire in the following centuries.

Meissen, Friedrich II von Thüringen, 1323-49, silver Groschen

There was no lack of new developments during the following century and it began with the introduction of a large silver coin in Prague in 1300, which came to be called the Prager groschen. The Meissner groschen beginning in 1338 was modeled after the Prague issues and the first German gold coin, the goldgulden, was struck about the same time, during the reign of Emperor Ludwig IV (1314-1347). The proliferation of new coin types with many varieties in all parts of the Empire made the need for a regulatory mechanism readily apparent. Attempts to meet this requirement were made during the late 14th and early 15th centuries in the form of one or another monetary union (Münzverein or Münzbund). A monetary union was made up of several states and/or cities within a limited geographic area, which would agree to strike coins to a specific standard of weight and fineness. The coins of the member states could then circulate on par with each other throughout the union, thus facilitating trade and commerce in the region. The first of these was the Wendischen Münzverein, formed by Lübeck, Hamburg and Wismar in 1379 and expanded by the addition of Lüneburg, Rostock and Stralsund in 1381. The Münzverein of Lower Saxony (Niedersachsen) was constituted the following year by Brunswick, Einbeck, Goslar and Hannover. Not to be left behind, the large territorial and ecclesiastic states moved to form their own unions and none was more powerful than the Münzverein of the four Rhineland electors. Established in 1386, it comprised the elector/archbishops of Cologne, Mainz and Trier, as well as the elector/count palatine of the Rhine (Pfalzgraf). In northern Franconia and Bavaria, a monetary union of the burgraves of Nuremberg with the bishops of Bamberg and Würzburg was formed in 1396. The Bodensee Münzbund began in 1403 and included Basel, Breisach, Freiburg and Kolmar among its member towns, but added a number of other places in rapid succession. The Schwaben Münzbund was organized in Riedlingen in 1423 and had many of the small towns and cities of Swabia as its members. The cumulative result of the regional organization of coinage in the Empire was to regularize the coinage among groups of towns and/or princely territories for the mutual benefit of the governing powers of each member. This helped to regulate prices, wages, taxes and real estate values within a region, furthering the growth of trade and the increased worth of the urban middle classes.

The proliferation of monetary unions was just one aspect of the growing complexity of the Holy Roman Empire of the German Nation in its political organization. The landscape had over time become increasingly fragmented as the old princely houses (Alt Fürstenfamilien) repeatedly subdivided their territories among the surviving sons of each succeeding generations. For example, when Count Heinrich of Schwalenberg died in 1214, his sons divided his lands and founded the lines of Schwalenberg and Waldeck. Schwalenberg was further divided in 1249 into Schwalenberg-Sternberg, Schwalenberg-Schwalenberg and Schwalenberg-Oldenburg. Waldeck was not divided until 1397, when the lines of Waldeck-Waldeck and Waldeck-Landau were established. In 1475, Waldeck-Waldeck was further divided into Waldeck-Wildungen and Waldeck-Eisenberg. In a little more than two and a half centuries, the single countship of Schwalenberg had become seven tiny countships with very little power or economic base. The root of the problem was that hardly any of the noble dynastic houses had accepted the principle of primogeniture, by which the entire patrimony devolved to the eldest son upon his father's death. Rather the opposite was true among most of the German princes. As each family's territory became more fragmented, the resultant small portions of land were less able to support each petty noble. Some of the more forward thinking princes recognized the negative effects of this practice and modified the terms of inheritance. One such method was to give the oldest son the largest portion of territory along with its principle family seat, while offering his younger brothers small enclaves with subsidiary castles or estate houses as their residences. Another means to insure the integrity of the principality was to acquire territories through shrewd marriages to women of other noble houses whose male lines were in danger of extinction. Some families were more successful than others and these were usually those states that were or would become the largest in the Empire, such as Bavaria, Brandenburg, Württemberg and Saxony. Others remained continually small and weak, so that by the beginning of the 16th century, the Empire was comprised of about 400 various temporal principalities, ecclesiastical states, free cities and towns.

On a larger scale, the organization of the Empire and the relationship between emperor and the constituent states underwent a number of changes during the later Middle Ages which would have a direct bearing on events as they unfolded after 1500. Although the emperor had been a hereditary office at first and descended through several dynastic changes over the centuries, it gradually was viewed as an elective office requiring the support of the great nobles and high church officials even as it remained within the purview of one or another of the most powerful families. A series of struggles over the imperial succession during the 13th and 14th centuries pushed the great princes into concert with the pope to formulate a solution to this problem. The result was the Golden Bull of 1356, which formalized the mechanism of election to insure a smooth transition at the death of an emperor. There had already been an electoral college of sorts, which dealt with the succession, but the 1356 document formalized the system and named seven electors as the principals in the college. They were the Margrave of Brandenburg, the Duke of Saxony, the Count Palatine of the Rhine, the King of Bohemia and the three Archbishops of Cologne, Mainz and Trier. As a general rule, the electoral college only served to approve what was usually a fait accompli as the emperor's eldest son, as heir apparent, would normally follow his father as emperor. In 1273, Rudolf I of Hapsburg (1273-1291) was elected emperor and several members of his dynasty followed in the office during the next century until the family permanently held the position beginning in 1438. The Hapsburgs would remain the imperial first family until the end of the Empire in 1806 and then in Austria until 1918.

The introduction of new coin types continued all during the 15th century and many of these began as local denominations, only to be adopted by neighboring states and spreading throughout the Empire. A small sized groschen was first struck in Göttingen in 1429 and later called a körtling. The schilling became a real coin in 1432 when Lübeck began producing it and its half called a sechsling. The doppelschilling was introduced by the Wendische Münzverein in 1468, but the greatest development, both in size and importance was the commencement of heavy silver coinage in the Tyrol in 1486. Containing almost 32 grams of silver, the guldengroschen was soon being struck in districts rich in silver mines throughout the Empire. One of the first to follow this trend was Saxony, whose earliest guldengroschen dates from 1500. That state had already introduced the schreckenberger in 1498, seven of which came to equal a goldgulden or guldengroschen. The town of Goslar introduced the mariengroschen in 1503, so named because it featured St. Mary in its principle design. The counts of Schlick began striking guldengroschen near their mine at Joachimsthal in 1519. The local designation was a joachimsthaler, which was soon shortened to simply thaler or taler. About the time that these large coins were beginning to be called talers (1520s), the first of enormous amounts of silver were arriving in Europe from new mines in the Americas. The increasing supplies of silver caused far-reaching repercussions throughout Europe, which would impact economies for years into the future.

Several other innovations in coinage took place prior to 1500, but they had more to do with the information found on coins than with the technical aspects of weight and fineness. The first of these was the use of year dates on coins. Except for the handful of Danish coins known with the date 1234, dating did not begin to appear on European money with any regularity until towards the end of the 14th century. The first German coin to be dated was a silver groschen of Jungheit, a mint for Aachen, with the year 1372.

Pfalz, Ludwig IV, 1436-49, gold Goldgulden, Bacharach mint, 1437

The earliest dated goldgulden are issues of 1436 from Bacharach (Electoral Pfalz), Höchst (Hesse) and Koblenz (Rhineland). The designation of denominations was introduced somewhat later and consisted of the Latin name for the coin as part of the legends. This usage was limited to only a few denominations such as the groschen (GROSSVS) and the schilling (SOLIDVS). In the early 16th century, numerical indicators of value, usually as a fraction of either a large circulating unit or of a reckoning unit, began to appear on German coins. Thus a 'ZI' above the coat of arms of a coin meant that it was 1/21 of a taler and therefore, a groschen. A '3' placed in a circle on the breast of the two-headed imperial eagle on one side of a coin referred to 'three kreuzer' as its nominal value. Mint officials, especially those who designed and made the dies used to strike the coins, found ways to leave their signatures on the coins to mark their handiwork. The names of moneyers are known for many medieval issues from all over Europe, but most of these remain fairly anonymous in the absence of written mint records. German mint officials began to devise personal symbols during the latter part of the 15th century, which they placed inconspicuously on the coins that either they had designed or which were struck under their direction. Sometime during the 16th century, some mint officials began to use the initials of their names, often in conjunction with a symbol, to identify coins produced during their tenures at various mints. This practice was common for most German coinages until late in the 19th century, although the transition to single letter mint designations had already begun under Prussian reforms from the mid-18th century.

The Early Modern Era. As the 16th century dawned, Germany was under the nominal rule of Emperor Maximilian I (1493-1519), a strong administrator and military leader who put the power and prestige of the Habsburgs at the forefront of his policies. Through shrewd marriage alliances, he came to possess the Spanish Netherlands and his son ruled Spain as Philip I (1504-6). Near the end of Maximilian's reign appeared Martin Luther, whose confrontation with the Church of Rome was to have a lasting effect on Germany and would cause repercussions throughout Europe for centuries to come. Maximilian's grandson, Karl V was emperor 1519-1556, but also ruled Spain as Carlos I beginning in 1516. Karl's position in Spain was one of the conduits by which the large influx of silver from Spanish possessions in the New World flooded the German Empire. Karl V had not been in power for very long when the need for regulation of the coinage in Germany became apparent. The first attempt at this was made through the Imperial Monetary Regulation of Esslingen (Esslinger Reichsmünzordnung), which was announced in Esslingen on 10 November 1524. Esslingen was a free city in Württemberg, on the Neckar River, not far from Stuttgart, and had been a member of the Swabian Monetary Union.

The Monetary Regulations of 1524 attempted to bring some order to the coinage in several ways. Coins were to have the arms of the issuing state on the obverse and the imperial eagle with appropriate inscriptions on the reverse. The Cologne mark of fine silver weighing 233.856 grams was firmly established at the unit upon which all coinage in the Empire would be based thereafter. The goldgulden was to have a fineness of .91667. The guldengroschen should have a fineness of .938 and weight of 29.23 grams, thus containing 27.41 grams of silver. The groschen, as a local coinage, was mandated to be struck at .750 fineness. To insure that the regulations were upheld, it became necessary to evaluate (Valvation) the many types of circulating coins in the Empire. For administration purposes, the Empire had been earlier divided into six circles, later to be expanded to seven. Each imperial circle (Kreis) became responsible for holding a proving day (Kreisprobationstag) once each year to check each coin issuer's compliance with the imperial regulations. As ambitious as the Esslingen rules were, it soon became apparent that they were not very effectual. One problem was that the guldengroschen, which were already in circulation in large quantities, did not meet the proposed standard. The only solution would have been to recall them and strike new coins to the standard, but this would have been prohibitively expensive and was universally vetoed by all issuers. A second problem was the proposed fineness for the groschen and hence, for all minor silver coins in that the silver content would have been higher than the nominal value of the coinage. Further adjustments and refinement of the regulations would have to be made before a workable solution to the existing problems could be instituted.

Saxony, Georg the Bearded,
1500-39, silver Guldengroschen, 1530

It would be twenty-seven years before another official edict would strive to correct the deficiencies of the 1524 regulations. Meanwhile, a development occurred which, although seemingly inconsequential at the time, would reverberate through monetary issues during the ensuing centuries. In 1530, after the division of monetary production between the Ernestine and Albertine Lines in Saxony, new talers were issued under the rule of Duke Georg the Bearded (1500-39). This issue was the first to include as part of its inscriptions the words Nach altem Schrot und Korn, meaning the coin was issued "based upon the old standard of weight and fineness." The meaning of the phrase was that the issuer had adhered to the parameters established in 1524 and meant a departure from the earlier goldgulden which had fallen short of the requirement. The inscription would see use on many different issues from various territories of the Empire all during the 16th through 18th centuries.

In 1551, the First Augsburg Monetary Regulations (Erste Augsburger Reichsmünzordnung) were issued in an attempt to define the coinage, which could circulate in the Empire to a greater degree than did the decree of 1524. The first point was that all stated weights in regional monetary systems were to be based on the Cologne mark. The amount of fine silver in the taler was increased to 27.5 grams and the value equivalent of 72 (kreuzer) was to be included in the coin's design. The kreuzer had become the small coin in the southern parts of Germany generally used for the standard of evaluation. Additional denominations of 6, 12, 20 and 36 kreuzer were also to be struck, but local coinage was to be struck utilizing a reckoning gulden of 60 kreuzer value. The new regulations did not meet with very much more success than did those of 1524. Talers equal to 72 kreuzer were only struck in small quantities, mostly in South German states and cities. The kreuzer was not generally accepted north of the Main River. Rather, the coin issuing states of North and Central Germany adhered to the groschen-based taler, which was not equivalent to the goldgulden. The exchange rate of the goldgulden rose far above 72 kreuzer in the years after 1551. Further adjustments to the regulations were needed before the problems with coinage and monetary circulation could be lessened.

The Second Augsburg Monetary Regulations (Zweite Augsburger Reichsmünzordnung) heralded a new attempt at reform and followed the first only eight years later in 1559. To begin with, the ducat was declared the official gold coin of the Empire. The goldgulden no longer was held to equal a silver gulden, but was now valued at 75 kreuzer. The ducat, being of a higher fineness, overtook the goldgulden as the new gold coin of choice throughout the German lands. The silver gulden of 60 kreuzer, long popular in South Germany, was to be struck as a regular coin and called a reichsguldiner. Minor denominations based on the gulden were to be struck at 5, 10 and 30 kreuzer and all were to have a fineness of .930. Local minor coinage of various pfennig types and their multiples would be allowed to continue in production.

The monetary laws of both 1551 and 1559 concerned themselves with the values and rating of local minor coins, as well as the governing of coin designs on the larger imperial denominations and their fineness. Additional regulations of the various state mints were promulgated, especially regarding the mandatory circle proving days (Kreisprobationstage). These were now to be held twice a year, on 1 May and 1 October, under the direction of the monetary warden of each circle (Kreismünzwardein). Technical examinations were made upon the coins submitted by the mint officials of every issuing entity in the circle to determine if they were of the legal weight and fineness. The ineffectiveness of the monetary laws regarding local coinage remained readily apparent, however, as the multiplicity of minor coins was often more than the circle authorities could hope to examine. Working against rigidly enforceable regulation was the weakness of central imperial authority in relation to the powerful territorial princes, especially the imperial electors, who had their own interests to consider. In 1566, the regulations of 1559 were supplemented by additions meant to adjust some of the earlier provisions, which had proved to be untenable during the interim. The taler had been allowed to drop to a rate of 68 kreuzer, but was once again raised to the earlier 72 kreuzer value. The coined alloyed weight of the taler was already 29.23 grams at a fineness of .889 and was to remain the primary coin of the Empire until about 1700. Yet, the reichsguldiner of 60 kreuzer was still not generally accepted outside of South Germany, mainly because the goldgulden was no longer in parity with the silver coin. The taler gained prominence because it had retained its value for the most part against the goldgulden and was more easily integrated into the coinage system with it. This situation lasted until 1580, when the reichstaler was revalued to equal 90 kreuzer.

The Thirty Years' War and High Inflation. The root causes of the general European conflict known as the Thirty Years' War, because it lasted from 1618 to 1648, were the unsettled nature of religious differences arising from the Protestant Reformation of the previous century and the overlapping interests of the secular princes and the emperor. The war began as a religious struggle, but it soon became apparent that it was a political conflict as well. The event which precipitated the war was the election by the Protestant nobility in Bohemia of Friedrich V, Elector and Count Palatine of the Rhine, as their king in 1618. This was viewed as a personal affront by the emperor as the Habsburgs had been also kings of Bohemia since 1526. Soon armies were in the field and a long series of campaigns saw many of the other European countries drawn into the fray. Friedrich's forces were commanded by the mercenary general Count Ernst von Mansfeld, which enjoyed some initial successes before being routed at the Battle of White Mountain near Prague in 1620. The Catholic League, under the leadership of Duke Maximilian of Bavaria, supported Emperor Ferdinand II (1619-37), with the able Count Tserclaes von Tilly at the head of its army. Numerous personalities took part in various events during the three decades of warfare across Germany. As armies marched back and forth, cutting wide swaths of destruction in the states through which they passed, the civilian population was subjected to ever increasing acts of cruelty and barbarism. Yet, whole areas of Germany were left untouched by the war as long as they were not part of the theatre of operations.

King Christian IV of Denmark (1588-1648) raised an army to oppose the Emperor, but eventually lost all he had gained at the hands of Tilly and Duke Albrecht Eusebius von Wallenstein of Friedland (1583-1634). Wallenstein raised a private army in the service of the Emperor and was given the duchies of Mecklenburg for his efforts.

Erfurt, silver 2 Thaler, 1634, commemorating the battle of Lützen and death of Gustavus Adolphus

King Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden (1611-32) took up the Protestant cause and landed in Pomerania to organize the northern princes. Meanwhile, Tilly's army sacked and burned Magdeburg in 1631, killing most of the 30,000 inhabitants. It was an event which shocked just about all of Europe, even as inured as many people had become to the brutality of the war. Gustavus Adolphus won a great victory over Tilly at Breitenfeld in 1631. Then Tilly died in the spring of 1632 after being wounded in the defense of Bavaria. Gustavus won a decisive battle against Wallenstein at Lützen in November, but lost his life on the field. Meanwhile, France had taken a position of support for the Protestants against the Empire at the instigation of Cardinal Richelieu. In an ironic twist which pointed to the increasing political nature of the war, Catholic France was supporting Protestant and Catholic princes alike against the Catholic Emperor. Clearly, religion was not the driving force behind Richelieu's intrigues, but rather the fear of a powerful Empire seated in Vienna and backed by Spain, which might thwart the ambitions of France and her own vision of greatness. The war dragged on throughout the 1630s. Fearing the growing ambitions of his general, Ferdinand II had Wallenstein murdered in 1634. France was invaded from the Netherlands by a Spanish army and from the east by the main imperial army, the war spread to Italy, continued in the Rhineland and spilled into the Netherlands. In late 1641 negotiations began in Münster and Osnabrück which would eventually lead to a peace of sorts, but until then the patchwork of states and cities and intertwined territorial provincialism which was pre-modern Germany continued to be at the mercy of the rest of Europe.

Richelieu and Louis XIII died in 1643, but the French continued winning important battles under the leadership of young rising stars such as the Duc d'Enghien and Turenne or were beneficiaries of others won by armies led by the Swedes or German generals. The costly battle of Freiburg im Breisgau in 1644 saw the French force the retreat of the Bavarian army. The German Protestants under the Swede Torstensson inflicted a crushing defeat on the Bavarians and Imperialist armies in 1645 at Tabor near Prague, thus opening the way to Vienna. The Austro-Bavarian army regrouped and drove the French and Protestant princes combined armies back to the Rhine by the end of the year. In 1646, Turenne took the field of operations to Bavaria and devastated the countryside around Munich, then joined with the Swedes in southern Württemberg for the winter. Nothing decisive took place in 1647 and the following year saw Turenne besieging Munich, while the Swedes invested Prague. Finally news that peace was being negotiated in earnest brought most of the general hostilities to an end. The series of agreements that came to be known as the Peace of Westphalia were signed on 24 October 1648. The negotiations at Münster were between the Holy Roman Empire and France, whereas those at Osnabrück were concluded between the Empire on one side and Sweden and the Protestant powers in Germany on the other. The most immediate consequences of the Peace of Westphalia, other than the many adjustments of territories within the Empire, were those relating to religious rights and the territorial rights of the secular princes. Toleration of religion was secured for all three main groups in the Empire – Catholic, Lutheran and Calvinist. The territorial sovereignty of the states in the Empire was recognized and each prince was permitted to contract treaties with any other state as long as there was no danger to the Empire. The emperor and the imperial diet lost much of their former power, resulting in the central authority being almost entirely replaced by the sovereignty of about 300 princes. The development of national unity was severely curtailed, but the rise to greater power of several of the largest states, such as Bavaria and Brandenburg, was certainly facilitated.

The Thirty Years' War was an economic disaster for much of Germany. Cities which had been besieged and occupied were not able to sustain a reasonable growth rate. Invading armies cut transportation routes and thus disrupted trade. Those same armies stripped the countryside bare searching for food, for men, and horses. The monetary system, as part of the overall economic matrix, was affected by these events as well. Revenues to coin issuing entities, especially local lords and the petty nobility, were a function of agricultural production. Times of underproduction meant that grain prices rose accordingly. One of these times occurred prior to the start of the war, during what has become known as the "small ice age" of the late 16th and early 17th century. If there happened to be a 20% decrease in the harvest, the result would be an 80% increase in the market price for food. A 50% decrease because of war or extreme weather resulted in food price increases of up to 450%. The fluctuations in the grain market upon which petty lords and nobles depended for their income were exacerbated by the beginnings of hostilities in 1618.

The monetary regulations of 1559 had theoretically sought to control imperial coinage, the taler, gulden and kreuzer, and the petty nobility were not permitted to strike those denominations. However, a loophole in the laws did allow local minor coinage to be struck with low silver fineness in whatever quantities the lord desired or could manage with his resources. Some of these nobles often sold control of their mint production to speculators in order to have ready money in uncertain times. The mint profits were enhanced by manipulating the weight and fineness of the coins thus produced, much to the detriment of the economy, on both a local and national scale. In addition to the unscrupulous practices of the nobility, the towns and cities followed similar policies, with added injury by the issues of counterfeiters.

The procedure was to sort out coins of good weight and fineness, then cut or melt them to produce new coins of lower fineness. From these practices came the terms kipper and wipper. Kipper is derived from the Low German word kippen, meaning to clip and refers to the money-clippers who cut or shaved metal from the edges of coins. Wipper comes from umwippen, that is, tipping the weighing balance if good coins were measured against debased issues. As the copper content in silver coins was gradually increased, the coins took on a reddish appearance. To counteract this trend, the moneyers used a variety of methods to cover the coppery tinge and make the coins seem to be of good quality. By the time the reddish color reappeared, the coins had already entered circulation and the holder would learn too late the fraud of which he was a victim. The perpetrators were interested in making a large profit as quickly as possible.

The issuers of debased money operated in two ways. One was for several entities who held the mint right to form a monetary group (Münzkonsortium) using their imperial privilege to jointly issue coins for all their territories, which would have the force of law to circulate among the populace. The second method was to offer the people an exchange of their large denomination coins for debased minor coins plus a premium. For example, in a particular principality, a reichstaler would be offered in exchange for 120 kreuzer, even though the official rate was 100 kreuzer. The buyer would have a brief profit and could spend the money in a short time without incurring a loss. Then the next offer to buy talers would be at a rate of 140 kreuzer, but those coins would be debased even further. By the time the person holding the low value coinage realized what had transpired, it would be too late to recoup the loss. A race to devalue all minor coinage as well as the major issues ensued.

The following table illustrates the decline in value of the kreuzer as it took an ever increasing amount to equal a taler.

YEAR	KREUZER	YEAR	KREUZER
1600	76	1621	210
1618	96	1622	270
1619	100	1623	360-390
1620	140	1624	390

The taler became gradually more expensive and the prices of copper, silver and food continued to rise. Meanwhile, the income of the average wage earner remained stagnant, while that of skilled workers did not rise enough to keep up with the inflationary pressures. An example of a rise in food prices is illustrative of the growing problem during the early period of the Thirty Years' War. In Munich, a bushel of grain rose from four gulden in 1617 to 52 gulden in April 1623.

The large-scale money changers and bankers did not suffer to the same extent as the common folk. They held back the high quality coinage and would not accept debased money. The bankers also used the taler and ducat for their transactions, or operated on the basis of credit notes, so were protected from price drops in the long term. Large coins could not easily be clipped and chemical tests could be quickly performed to detect dubious coins. Debasement of the coinage was only one cause of the rapid rise in prices and the rampant inflation. The scarcity of food was brought on in part by crop failures and stockpiling in case of war. Speculators and middlemen dealing in grain and other foodstuffs also contributed to commodity price rises. Gradually, various factors caused events to overtake the petty nobility and others who had at first profited by inflation and scarcity of food. They tried to reverse the economic downturn with regulations and prohibitions, but to no avail. Sooner or later, just about every minting authority was forced to issue debased Kipper coinage. The situation across Germany became so serious that a finance reform was finally necessary to return the economy to some stability and this occurred in April 1623. Despite the ravages of the war as it progressed, good coinage was issued in most German regions throughout the period of hostilities and beyond. Not all states could issue coins at all times, but the amount and variety of surviving coins from the first half of the 17th century indicates that mintages were substantial during the period, even in the smaller states and towns.

Steps to a unified monetary system. In the aftermath of the long war, Germany gradually repaired itself. Some regions recovered more quickly than others, depending on how much they were affected by the sieges, campaigns and destruction of the conflict. This is not to state that all was peaceful in the land. Northern Germany was affected by a war between Denmark and Sweden during 1657 and 1658. The eastern boundaries of the Empire were not far from a series of battles between the Prussians and Poland ending in 1660 and then the Prussians against Sweden concluding with the Battle of Fehrbellin in 1675. The Ottoman Turks made several attempts to expand further into Europe, even laying siege to Vienna in 1683, and causing ripples of fear across every land. Despite these and other clashes, Germany slowly rebuilt. As trade and commerce returned to normal and agricultural production increased to something close to prewar totals, the inadequacies of conflicting currencies became more apparent. Attempts were made to return to the earlier imperial standards, but a steady inflationary rise took place during the middle part of the century. Since the war and in large part because of it, the number of towns and rulers who legally held the mint right had increased markedly. New nobles (Neufürsten) were created by the grateful emperor for services rendered during the war and each was endowed with extensive territories and the right to coin money. Very few issuing authorities were striking coins to the old standards and it was apparent by mid-century that reform required a concerted effort and immediate attention.

In 1667, Electoral Saxony and Brandenburg joined together in a monetary agreement named after the place at which it was concluded, the secularized monastery of Zinna near Magdeburg. The Monetary Convention of Zinna (Münzkonvention von Zinna) held that 10½ talers, each containing 22.25 grams of pure silver, or 15¾ gulden were to be struck from the fine mark. Additionally, the gulden would now equal taler, three gulden were equal to the ducat and the goldgulden was exchanged for two gulden and 20 kreuzer. Brunswick-Lüneburg joined in the convention in 1668, with more to follow. Although the agreement initially was only between two states, albeit two of the important electorates of the Empire, it rapidly became the de facto standard throughout Germany. The ability of the individual German states to decide their own monetary policy demonstrated the inherent weakness of the Empire envisioned in the Peace of Westphalia. During the course of the next century and a half, the old regime would dissipate itself in meaningless struggles, both internal and external, to the point at which its very existence became an impediment to the aspirations of some of the more powerful princes.

Brunswick-Lüneburg-Valenberg, Johann Friedrich, 1665-79, silver 2/3 Thaler, 1679

The creeping inflation throughout the Empire since mid-century became accelerated by the 1670s as some of the smaller states introduced debased coinage into the economy once again. Some of the issuers had at best a dubious right to mint coins, but even those with proven coinage privileges attempted to increase their revenues by producing more coins per bullion unit. Underlying causes that spurred the minor German nobility to this activity were the desire to emulate the opulent French court of Louis XIV and also the expense incurred by others of the princes in fighting off the French attacks along the Rhine. Only some of the princes held their titles directly from the emperor (Reichsunmittelbarkeit), without any intervening noble to claim feudal service. All the others owed some sort of service to their immediate liege lord, either in the form of money or a contingent of fighting men including themselves. Whatever the case, the series of French wars against the Empire, mostly along the Rhine and in Alsace –Lorraine, pecked away at the frontier and causing loss to Germany. The debasement of coinage brought about by these circumstances and carried out by many an unscrupulous nobleman, gave the name to the period of the 1680s as the "Small" or "Second Kipper Period" (Kleine Kipperzeit, Zweitere Kipperzeit). In attempting to curb these abuses, a number of states, cities and several of the imperial circles countermarked certain coins to indicate that those so marked were of the correct weight and fineness. Countermarks of Cologne, the Westphalian and Franconian Circles, among others, are known mostly on gulden or talers.

In 1687, Brandenburg instituted a new standard that reflected the reality of lower silver content in circulating coinage, but not as low as most of the debased issues had in their alloy. Electoral Saxony and Brunswick-Lüneburg, the other parties to the Zinna standard, joined Brandenburg in 1690 to institute what became known as the Leipzig Standard (Leipziger Fuss). The fine silver mark would now produce twelve talers or eighteen gulden, with the taler containing 19.45 grams of pure silver. Adjustments to the new standard were accomplished at Torgau in the same year which affected the minor coins below the denomination of taler. The two Gute Groschen (1/12 taler) was to be struck from a reckoning taler of 12 to the fine mark, whereas the single Gute Groschen (1/24 taler) and the Mariengroschen

(1/36 taler) would be coined from a reckoning taler of 12½ to the fine mark. The smallest coins in denominations of one, two, three, four and six pfennig were to come from a reckoning taler of 13 to the fine mark. As the new standard became accepted throughout the Empire, many of the smaller mints closed down because it became unprofitable for them to produce the good quality coins. Finally, in 1738, the Leipzig Standard became officially the Imperial Standard, but the promise of stability was short-lived.

Trier, Johann Hugo von Orsbeck, 1676-1711, silver 1/6 Thaler, Koblenz mint, 1705

The Kingdom of Prussia rose to prominence under Friedrich II the Great (1740-86), largely due to his wars of aggressive expansionism. The First and Second Silesian Wars (1740-42 and 1744-45), as well as the War of the Austrian Succession (1740-48), brought Prussia territorial gains, but also necessitated a debasement of the coinage to help defray the costs. In 1750, Friedrich's chief mint director named Graumann established the standard of 14 talers to a fine mark (14-Taler-Fuss or Graumann Standard) and the taler now was to contain 16.67 grams of pure silver. Friedrich was able to withstand the forces of Austria, Russia and France during the Seven Years' War (1756-63) and raise the prestige of Prussia greatly in the eyes of all Europeans, but he was unable to export his coinage standard much beyond the borders of his much enlarged state. The majority of states in the Empire adhered to the monetary convention concluded between Austria and Bavaria in 1753, by which a speciestaler equal to 1 reichstalers or two gulden were to be struck at the ratio of ten to the fine mark of silver. This was known as the 20 Gulden Fuss and coins were called Konventions- in front of the denomination, as in Konventionstaler, Konventionsgroschen, etc. In 1754, Bavaria altered the standard to a 24-Gulden Fuss, so the taler became worth 2 gulden 24 kreuzer, an increase of twenty percent in the value of the taler over the gulden. The 24-Gulden Fuss became the Reichsfuss, adopted in the states and cities of South Germany and in the West-central part of the Empire as well. It was used mostly as the standard for minor local coinage which was intended to circulate only within each issuing state. At the end of the war in 1763, the Austrian-Bavarian standard was confirmed by the Convention of Leipzig and eventually accepted throughout the Empire, except in Prussia, during the next few years. By 1800, the 24-Gulden Fuss had declined further to 24½ gulden.

The transition from 18th to 19th centuries was marked by the succession of conflicts known collectively as the Napoleonic Wars (1792-1815). Those German states which opposed Napoleon suffered severely and others which acquiesced to the French found themselves absorbed by artificial entities and forced to provide men for the Grand Armée. Germany emerged from the wars changed forever. In 1806, Napoleon abolished the tottering and rotting edifice which had been the Holy Roman Empire and Austria became just another large state in the makeup of Europe. Through the process of mediatization, the smaller sovereign states were added to the larger ones, reducing their number from over 300 to less than fifty. Secularization of the many ecclesiastical states added further territory to the principalities still in existence.

Württemberg, Wilhelm I, 1816-64, silver 2 gulden, 1824

Some of the princes were given more prestigious ranks, with Bavaria, Hanover, Saxony and Württemberg becoming kingdoms along side of Prussia. The latter suffered through disasters on the battlefield, brought on in part, by a loss of the vision Friedrich the Great had left as his legacy. Painful loss of territory and military prestige actually furthered the cause of reform and Prussia emerged victorious, more powerful and greatly enlarged across the whole expanse of Germany.

Events moved quickly during the middle years of the 19th century. By the Dresden Accord of 30 July 1834, the member states of the German Customs Union (Deutschen Zollverein) finally subscribed to the Prussian 14-taler standard of 1750. This brought all the German states under Prussian economic leadership except for Austria. The South German Monetary Union (Süddeutscher Münzverein) was formed in 1837 and most of the southern and west-central states joined, based on the 24½-gulden standard. The following year, the Zollverein established a new coin denomination struck seven to the fine mark called the doppeltaler (2 taler), which was equal to 3½ gulden. This helped to bridge the gap in exchange rates between the northern and southern systems. 1848 was a year which witnessed social upheaval in parts of Germany as attempts were made to establish democratic parliaments in some of the monarchical states. The Revolution of 1848 began in Prussia and spread throughout the other states, leading to some liberalizing influences becoming a permanent part of the German political scene. In the same year, two of the last states to remain outside of the monetary standard, Mecklenburg-Schwerin and Mecklenburg-Strelitz, accepted the 14-taler standard, but did not join the Zollverein. The greatest departure from the old system took place on 24 January 1857 in Vienna, when the members of the expanded German-Austrian Monetary Union established a new standard of 30 talers, not to the old Cologne mark of fine silver, but to a new unit, the Zollpfund (tariff pound) of 500 grams.

In 1864, Prussia fought a war with Denmark over the question of Schleswig-Holstein and annexed that territory upon emerging victorious. Lingering differences with Austria over who should rule the duchies of Schleswig and Holstein led to war between France and Prussia in 1866. Prussia crushed the Austrian army in Bohemia and the war came to a quick end. The result was another large acquisition of territory as Prussia annexed Hannover, Hesse-Cassel, Frankfurt am Main, Nassau and Schleswig-Holstein. Other states which had opposed Prussia, such as Bavaria, Württemberg, Saxony and Baden, were forced to pay indemnities to the victor, as did Austria itself. The war had also put an end to the Zollverein, but a new customs union was created in its place in 1867 and this was the North German Federation. Meanwhile, France edged closer to siding with Austria in an effort to counter the growing power of Prussia. War finally broke out between Austria and Prussia in 1870 and all during this time, negotiations were carried on among the various states of Germany for unification to the exclusion of Austria. After losing battle after battle, France was forced to capitulate and before the treaty of peace was signed, King Wilhelm of Prussia was crowned emperor (Kaiser) at Versailles on 18 January 1871. The Empire was constituted of 22 sovereign states, three free cities and the territory of Alsace-Lorraine.

Monetary reform of German coinage followed closely upon the foundation of the empire. On 4 December 1871, the Empire converted to the gold standard and all silver coins from five marks on down were to be considered as local currency. Ten gold marks were equal to 3 Vereinstalers or equal to 5 gulden 50 kreuzer of the South German standard or equal to 3 1/93 taler gold of the Bremen standard or 8 marks of the North German standard. The last German ducat was struck in Hamburg in 1872 and coinage production in the individual states was halted in 1873. Decimal coinage on the rate of 100 pfennig to the mark was instituted and coins up to one mark in value were struck at various imperial mints. Silver coins of 2, 3 and 5 marks and gold coins of 5, 10 and 20 marks were permitted to be struck for the individual states and cities, differing only in their obverse designs. On 1 January 1876, the Imperial Standard (Reichswährung) came into effect for all member states of the Empire. By 1878, all minor coins of the old systems issued by the various states became invalid as a medium of exchange. The old Vereinstaler or Reichstaler also disappeared from circulation by 1907, but owing to the popularity of it as a denomination, was replaced with the issuance of three-mark coins beginning in 1908.

Following the disastrous defeat of Germany in World War I, the Empire was dissolved and hereditary monarchies were abolished. The harsh terms of the Treaty of Versailles, which inflicted terrible hardship on an economy already weakened by years of war, sowed the seeds for even more unimaginable horrors in the coming decades. Another period of extremely high inflation during 1921 until near the end of 1923, caused the need for another reform. The new system instituted the Rentenmark, based upon the total state income, which helped reduce the worst of the inflation, but was only seen as a transition currency. In 1924, the Reichsmark standard was established and put into circulation the following year. The currency was stabilized and grew stronger in tandem with the economy, only to be subverted by the axiom of performing for the state as one of the pillars of National Socialism. After World War II, Germany was divided into East and West, each eventually developing its own coinage systems. The monetary reform of 1948 in West Germany instituted a currency based on the new Deutschmark and upon reunification of the two Germanies in 1991, it became the standard for all of Germany. The country finally had a single unit as the basis for all its coinage, at least until 31 December 2001.

German Coin Denominations

By the 16th century, two rather broad-based systems of circulating coins had developed in the states and cities of the Holy Roman Empire. They are roughly divided geographically into the Pfennig-Taler system of the North German states and the Kreuzer-Gulden system of South Germany. Many denominations were common to both systems and are not an indication of which system was used in any single state. In order to determine the system particular to a state or city, one should notice the medium sized minor coins of that state, as well as its geographical location. If the circulating values are expressed in kreuzers or gulden fractions, and the state is in the southern part of the Empire, then it is likely that the Kreuzer-Gulden system is in use there. Should the minor coins have values in taler fractions and the state is located in North or Central Germany, then the Pfennig-Taler system is more probable.

A number of denominations developed in several states and cities of northeastern and northwestern Germany which bordered the North and Baltic Seas. Some of these denominations were borrowed from the Netherlands, Denmark and Poland. They were mostly utilized as local subsidiary coinages which circulated along side larger coins, mostly talers.

Miscellaneous terms used to describe some coin denominations.

Gute – meaning 'good,' referring to alloy of high quality, as opposed to a debased or billon coin.

Hohlpfennig – small, thin coin, struck only on one side so design shows incuse on reverse, generally flat, but with raised ring near edge.

Licht – 'light,' a coin of lower weight than standard for that unit.

Reichs- a coin which is struck to the imperial standard for weight and fineness.

Schüsselpfennig – from word for 'cup' because design side is concave, a small, thin coin struck only on one side, design often shows through to reverse.

Schwer – 'heavy,' a coin of higher weight than standard for unit.

Species-/Spezies- usually found with –taler, meaning an actual taler of legal value, as opposed to a unit of reckoning of theoretical value.

GERMAN STATES

Although the origin of the German Empire can be traced to the Treaty of Verdun that ceded Charlemagne's lands east of the Rhine to German Prince Louis, it was for centuries little more than a geographic expression, consisting of hundreds of effectively autonomous big and little states. Nominally the states owed their allegiance to the Holy Roman Emperor, who was also a German king, but as the Emperors exhibited less and less concern for Germany the actual power devolved on the lords of the individual states. The fragmentation of the empire climaxed with the tragic denouement of the Thirty Years War, 1618-48, which devastated much of Germany, destroyed its agriculture and medieval commercial eminence and ended the attempt of the Hapsburgs to unify Germany. Deprived of administrative capacity by a lack of resources, the imperial authority became utterly powerless. At this time Germany contained an estimated 1,800 individual states, some with a population of as little as 300. The German Empire of recent history (the creation of Bismarck) was formed on April 14, 1871, when the king of Prussia became German Emperor William I. The new empire comprised 4 kingdoms, 6 grand duchies, 12 duchies and principalities, 3 free cities and the non-autonomous province of Alsace-Lorraine. The states had the right to issue gold and silver coins of higher value than 1 Mark; coins of 1 Mark and under were general issues of the empire.

MONETARY SYSTEM
Until 1871 the Mark (Marck) was a measure of weight.

North German States until 1837
2 Heller = 1 Pfennig
8 Pfennige = 1 Mariengroschen
12 Pfennige = 1 Groschen
24 Groschen = 1 Thaler
2 Gulden = 1-1/3 Reichsthaler
1 Speciesthaler (before 1753)
1 Convention Thaler (after 1753)

North German States after 1837
12 Pfennige = 1 Groschen
30 Groschen = 1 Thaler
1 Vereinsthaler (after 1857)

South German States until 1837
8 Heller = 4 Pfennige = 1 Kreuzer
24 Kreuzer Landmunze = 20 Kreuzer Convention Munze
120 Convention Kreuzer = 2 Convention Gulden = 1 Convention Thaler

South German States after 1837
8 Heller = 4 Pfennige = 1 Kreuzer

German States 1857-1871

As a result of the Monetary Convention of 1857, all the German States adopted a Vereinsthaler of uniform weight being 1/30 fine pound silver. They did continue to use their regional minor coin units to divide the Vereinsthaler for small change purposes.

After the German unification in 1871 when the old Thaler system was abandoned in favor of the Mark system (100 Pfennig = 1 Mark) the Vereinsthaler continued to circulate as a legal tender 3 Mark coin, and the double Thaler as a 6 Mark coin until 1908. In 1908 the Vereinsthalers were officially demonetized and the Thaler coinage was replaced by the new 3 Mark coin which had the same specifications as the old Vereinsthaler. The double Thaler coinage was not replaced as there was no great demand for a 6 Mark coin. Until the 1930's the German public continued to refer to the 3 Mark piece as a "Thaler".

Commencing 1871
100 Pfennig = 1 Mark

VERRECHNUNGS & GUTSCHRIFTS TOKENS

These were metallic indebtedness receipts used for commercial and banking purposes due to the lack of available subsidiary coinage. These tokens could be redeemed in sufficient quantities.

AACHEN

FREE CITY

(Achen, Urbs Aquensis, Aquis Grani)

This city, at the meeting point of Germany, Belgium and the Netherlands, 39 miles (65 Kilometers) west-southwest of Cologne, was founded by the Romans. It is the traditional birthplace of Charlemagne and served as the site for imperial coronations from his time until the early part of the 16th century. An imperial mint was established in Aachen in 1166 and continued in use until the early 14th century, at which time the city was raised to tree status and began producing its own coinage. The city coinage came to an end in 1798, just prior to French annexation in 1801. Prussia gained control of Aachen at the end of the Napoleonic Wars and made it part of its western provinces in 1815.

ALSACE

An old German area located in northeastern France between the Rhine River and Vosges Mountains which later became a French province.

Ruled by Rome, gradually being penetrated by the Germanic peoples. Belonged to the Holy Roman Empire 870-1648 while being united to the duchy of Swabia in 925. Later broken up into feudal principalities controlled chiefly by the Bishop of Strasbourg and Hapsburg family in the 14th century. Upper Alsace was given to Burgundy in 1469, but soon broke free. Occupied by French in Thirty Years' War and linked with France by means of Louis XIV's "Chambers of Reunion" 1680. Ceded to Germany by the Treaty of Frankfurt 1871 and under the German Empire 1871-1918. It was subject to unsuccessful attempts to Germanize between 1880-1910 and was restored to France by the Treaty of Versailles in 1919. In World War II held by Germany 1940-44; retaken by French and American armies and again restored to France.

ALTENA

A provincial town in Westphalia located on the Lenne River, some 17 miles (28 kilometers) south-southeast of Dortmund. It had been the seat of a line of the counts of Altena, but went to the counts of Mark upon the former's extinction in 1207. Altena remained the site of a residence of the counts of Mark, yet the town had a local coinage in the latter part of the 16th century.

ANHALT

The Principality of Anhalt in Central Germany, surrounded by Brandenburg, Brunswick and Saxony, had its origins in the same Ascanian family from which descended the margraves of Brandenburg and the dukes of Saxony. The nucleus of the Anhalt domains was the countship of Ballenstädt, whose first recorded ruler, Albrecht I, was in control there during the late 10th century. Albrecht's great-great-grandson, Albrecht III the Bear, ruled in Anhalt until 1170 and was also the margrave of Brandenburg until his death, as well as duke of Saxony until 1153. The patrimony was divided in 1170 and Albrecht III's third son, Bernhard, ruled in Anhalt and began a line of descendants, which lasted into the 20th century.

Various divisions occurred during the ensuing centuries, but the ruling princes often struck joint coinages. At the death of Georg I of Dessau and Köthen in 1474, his five surviving sons ruled together. Only two of them had any male children and they ruled separately in Dessau and Köthen until the latter fell extinct in 1566, at which time that branch reverted to Dessau. Meanwhile, Dessau had been divided in 1516 into Dessau, Plötzkau and Zerbst, but all reverted to Zerbst after a generation. One of the Zerbst princes succeeded in reuniting all the Anhalt lands in 1570 and his sons ruled jointly until the great division of 1603.

RULERS

Waldemar VI von Köthen, 1474-1508
Ernst I von Dessau, 1474-1516
Rudolf IV von Köthen, 1474-1510
Sigmund III, 1474-1487
Georg II, 1474-1509

Johann IV von Zerbst, 1516-1551
Georg III von Plötzkau, 1516-1553
Joachim I von Dessau, 1516-1561

Karl I von Zerbst, 1551-1561
Joachim II Ernst von Plötzkau, 1551-1586
Bernhard VII von Dessau, 1551-1570

Johann Georg I von Dessau, 1586-1603 (1618)
Christian I von Bernburg, 1586-1603 (1630)
Bernhard VIII, 1586-1596
August von Plötzkau, 1586-1603 (1653)
Rudolf von Zerbst, 1586-1603 (1621)
Johann Ernst, 1586-1601
Ludwig von Köthen, 1586-1603 (1650)

To avoid confusion over the identity of the issuing rulers, both joint coinages and issues in the name of single princes will all be listed prior to 1603 with names given in each instance.

After the division of 1603, the princes of Anhalt continued to issue joint coinage in many denominations. As some members of one generation died, their places were taken by their sons and various combinations of brothers, uncles, nephews and cousins are represented on the coins, either with their full or abbreviated names or simply as "brothers and fathers - princes of Anhalt". There are 4 distinct periods of joint coinage, 3 of which follow one upon the other and a later period separated from the first 3 by forty years.

ANHALT-BERNBURG

Located in north-central Germany. Appeared as part of the patrimony of Albrecht the Bear of Brandenburg in 1170. Bracteates were first made in the 12th century. It was originally in the inheritance of Heinrich the Fat in 1252 and became extinct in 1468. The division of 1603, among the sons of Joachim Ernst, revitalized Anhalt-Bernburg. Bernburg passed to Dessau after the death of Alexander Carl in 1863.

ANHALT-BERNBURG-SCHAUMBURG-HOYM

The title to Schaumburg was inherited through marriage by a branch of Anhalt-Bernburg in 1692. The separate line of Anhalt-Bernburg-Schaumburg-Hoym was founded in 1707 and became extinct in 1812, the title then falling to Austria by marriage.

ANHALT-DESSAU

Dessau was part of the 1252 division that included Zerbst and Cothen. In 1396 Zerbst divided into Zerbst and Dessau. In 1508 Zerbst was absorbed into Dessau. Dessau was given to the eldest son of Joachim Ernst in the division of 1603. As other lines became extinct, they fell to Dessau, which united all branches in 1863.

ANHALT-KOTHEN

Köthen has a checkered history after the patrimony of Heinrich the Fat in 1252. It was often ruled with other segments of the House of Anhalt. Founded as a separate line in 1603, became extinct in 1665 and passed to Plötzkau which changed the name to Köthen. It passed to Dessau after the death of Heinrich in 1847.

ANHALT-ZERBST

Zerbst was one of the major parts of the division of 1252. It was divided into Zerbst and Dessau in 1396 and absorbed Bernburg in 1486. Zerbst ceded to Dessau in 1508 and was given to the 4th son of Joachim Ernst in the division of 1603. It became extinct in 1793 and was divided between Dessau, Bernburg and Köthen.

ANHOLT

A town in Westphalia, Anholt is 7 miles (12km) west of Bocholt and very near the border with the Netherlands. It had early been the seat of a lordship, later a county, which passed into the possession of the Bronkhorst-Batenburg dynasty. A few coins were struck for local use in the late 16th century and again about the time of the Peace of Westphalia (1648-50).

ANKLAM

Anklam was a town in the duchy of Pomerania (Pommern) situated on the Peene River, 5 miles (8 kilometers) from the Baltic Sea coast and 27 miles (45 kilometers) northeast of Neubrandenburg. It was founded as a fortress by the Slavs, but gained rights as an important town and became a member of the Hanseatic League. Anklam bought the right to produce its own coinage from the duke in 1325 and began striking a series of small silver coins. After the dissolution of the Pomeranian provincial diet in 1622, during the Kipper Period of the Thirty Years' War, Anklam countermarked the minor silver coinage which circulated from other nearby states in its local region. The town came under Swedish rule in 1648, but was taken by Brandenburg-Prussia in 1676. Except for a short period in the early 18th century, it remained part of Prussia.

ARENBERG

A small principality with lands between the present-day Belgian border and the Rhine, west of Koblenz. The earliest lords of Arenberg are mentioned in the 12th century. The title and lands passed in marriage to the countship of Mark from where a new line of Arenberg lords began in the 14th century. At the end of the 15th century branch lines were founded in Sedan, Lumain and Rochefort. The male line of Arenberg became extinct in 1541 and passed by marriage to Ligne-Barbancon in 1547. The new line was raised to the rank of count in 1549, to prince in 1576 and to that of duke in 1644. The right to mint coins was granted in 1570. Philipp Franz issued Arenberg's only 17th century thaler. The lands on the left bank of the Rhine were lost to France in 1801 and the remaining possessions were mediatized in 1810.

AUGSBURG

BISHOPRIC

Founded in the late 9th century in the city of Augsburg, the bishopric eventually extended as far as the Bavarian frontier on the north and east, to Tyrol on the south and to Upper Swabia on the west. The earliest episcopal coinage dates from the mid-10th century and issues continued through each of the next eight and one-half centuries. The bishopric was secularized in 1803 and was absorbed by Bavaria.

FREE CITY

Founded by the Romans about 15B.C. and named Augusta Vindelicorum in honor of the Emperor Augustus, the city was the site of a German imperial mint for several centuries from about the year 1000. In 1276, Augsburg was made a free imperial city, but did not receive the right to strike its own coins until 1521. Earlier date issues were produced under the office of the Imperial Chamberlain, as listed above. Augsburg's coinage came to an end in 1805 and the city followed the bishopric into Bavarian envelopment in the following year.

BADEN

The earliest rulers of Baden, in the southwestern part of Germany along the Rhine, descended from the dukes of Zähringen in the late 11th century. The first division of the territory occurred in 1190, when separate lines of margraves were established in Baden and in Hachberg. Immediately prior to its extinction in 1418, Hachberg was sold back to Baden, which underwent several minor divisions itself during the next century. Baden acquired most of the Countship of Sponheim from Electoral Pfalz near the end of the 15th century. In 1515, the most significant division of the patrimony took place, in which the Baden-Baden and Baden-(Pforzheim) Durlach lines were established.

ARMS
Baden – diagonal bar from upper left to lower right
Sponheim – checkerboard
The usual arrangement is 4-fold arms of Baden quartered with Sponheim.

BADEN-BADEN LINE

Margraviate

Established in 1515 by Christoph I's eldest son, Bernhard III. This branch was often at odds with the rulers of the younger Baden-Durlach line because of religious differences resulting from the Protestant Reformation. When Baden-Baden finally became extinct in 1771, all lands and titles reverted to Baden-Durlach and all of Baden was reunited after a split of more than 250 years.

RULERS
Wilhelm, 1622-1677
Ludwig Wilhelm, 1677-1707
Ludwig Georg, 1707-1761
Under Regency of his Mother,
Francisca Sibylla until 1727
August Georg, 1761-1771
Extinct to Baden-Durlach

Baden – diagonal bar from upper left to lower right
The usual arrangement is shield of 4-fold arms of Baden quartered with Sponheim

BADEN-DURLACH LINE

Margraviate

Although Baden-Durlach was founded upon the division of Baden in 1515, the youngest son of Christoph I did not begin ruling in his own right until the demise of his father. This part of Baden was called Pforzheim until 1565, when the margrave moved his seat from the former to Durlach, located to the west and nearer the Rhine. After the male line of Baden-Baden failed in 1771 and the two parts of Baden were reunited, the fortunes of the margraviate continued to grow. Karlsruhe, near Durlach, was developed into a well-planned capital city. The ruler was given the rank of elector in 1803, only to be raised to grand duke three years later. The monarchy came to an end in 1918, but had by this time become one of the largest states in Germany.

BAMBERG

BISHOPRIC

The bishopric was founded in 1007 by Emperor Heinrich II (1002-24) in the town of Bamberg, 32 miles (53 kilometers) north-northwest of Nürnberg. The bishops began issuing their own coinage almost from the beginning and were given the rank of Prince of the Empire by the emperor about 1250. The bishopric was secularized in 1801 and was incorporated into Bavaria the following year.

BARBY

A small lordship located near the junction of the Elbe and Saale Rivers, about midway between Magdeburg and Dessau, founded in the early 13th century. The lord of Barby was a vassal of Saxony and was raised to the rank of count in 1497. The countship was divided in 1565, but only the main line of Barby and its successor in 1617, Barby-Mühlingen, issued any coinage. Barby became extinct in 1659 and its lands passed to Anhalt and Saxe-Weissenfels.

RULERS

BAVARIA

(Bayern)

One of the largest states in Germany, Bavaria was a duchy from earliest times, ruled by the Agilholfingen dynasty from 553 until it was suppressed by Charlemagne in 788. Bavaria remained a territory of the Carolingian Empire from that time until 911, when the son of the Count of Scheyern was made duke and began a new line of rulers there. A number of dukes during the next century and a half were elected emperor, but when the male line became extinct, Empress Agnes gave Bavaria to the Counts of Nordheim in 1061. His descendant, Heinrich XII the Lion, fell out of favor with the emperor and was deposed. The duchy was then entrusted to Otto VI von Wittelsbach, Count of Scheyern and descendant of the counts who had ruled from the early 10th century. Duke Otto I, as he was known from 1180 on, was the ancestor of the dynasty which ruled in Bavaria until 1918 and, from the late 13th century, in the Rhine Palatinate as well (see Electoral Pfalz). The first of several divisions took place in 1255 when lines in Upper and Lower Bavaria were established. The line in Lower Bavaria became extinct in 1340 and the territory reverted to Upper Bavaria. Meanwhile, the division of Upper Bavaria and the Palatinate took place and was confirmed by treaty in 1329, although the electoral vote residing with the Wittelsbachs was to be held jointly by the two branches. In 1347, Bavaria and all other holdings of the family in Brandenburg, the Tyrol and Holland were divided among six brothers. Munich had become the chief city of the duchy by this time. In 1475, Duke Stephen I, who had reunited most of the family's holdings in Bavaria, died and left three sons who promptly divided their patrimony once again. The lines of Ingolstadt, Landshut and Munich were founded, but as the other lines died out, the one seated in Munich regained control of all of Bavaria. Duke Albrecht IV instituted primogeniture in 1506 and from that time on, Bavaria remained united. When Elector Friedrich V of the Palatinate (Pfalz) was elected King of Bohemia in 1618, an event which helped precipitate the Thirty Years' War, Duke Maximilian I of Bavaria sided with the emperor against his kinsman. The electoral dignity had been given to the Pfalz branch of the Wittelsbachs by the Golden Bull of 1356, a fact which was a source of contention with the Bavarian branch of the family. With the ouster of Friedrich V, Maximilian I obtained the electoral right and control of the Palatinate in 1623, then also ruled over the Upper Palatinate (Oberpfalz) from 1628 until the conclusion of the war and the Peace of Westphalia. The Bavarian Wittelsbachs became extinct in 1777 and the line in Electoral Pfalz acquired Bavaria, thus uniting the two main territories of the dynasty under a single ruler for the first time since the early 14th century. When Napoleon abolished the Holy Roman Empire in 1806, bringing an end to the electoral system, the ruler of Bavaria was raised to the rank of king. The 19th century saw tragedy upon tragedy visit the royal family. Because of his opposition to the parliamentary reform movement, Ludwig I was forced to abdicate in 1848. His grandson, Ludwig II, inspired by his upbringing to spend his fortune building the fairy tale castle of Neuschwanstein, was forcibly removed by court nobles and died under mysterious circumstances in 1886. His younger brother, Otto, was declared insane and the kingdom was ruled by his uncle, the beloved Prince Luitpold, as prince regent. Ludwig II, the last King of Bavaria, was forced to abdicate at the end of World War I.

BEESKOW

A provincial town on the River Spree in Brandenburg-Prussia, about 43 miles southeast of Berlin. Beeskow is mentioned as early as 1185 and came under the control of the lords of Strele in the second half of the 13th century. It passed through the possession of several local noble families before its final acquisition by Brandenburg in 1571. The Elector of Brandenburg permitted a local copper coinage during the inflationary period at the beginning of the Thirty Years' War.

BENTHEIM-BENTHEIM

The countship of Bentheim was located on both sides of the Vechte River along the border between the Netherlands and Westphalia. The lords of Bentheim were descended from an eleventh-century marriage alliance of the countships of Holland and Nordheim. Tecklenburg was obtained through marriage in the middle of the 13th century with a separate line being founded in 1269. In 1454, Bentheim was divided into the lines of Bentheim-Bentheim and Bentheim-Steinfurt. The latter was a territory located about midway between the county of Bentheim and the city of Münster in Westphalia. The various divisions were reunited by marriage during the 16th century only to be divided again into five lines in 1606. By family agreement (1691), the heirs to the two lines of Bentheim-Bentheim and Bentheim-Steinfurt exchanged their counties and titles in 1693. Bentheim-Bentheim became extinct in 1803, when the last count died, but he had already ceded Bentheim to Hannover in 1753. It passed to Berg in 1806 and then to Prussia in 1813. Bentheim-Steinfurt was mediatized in 1806, but the count ¦was raised to the rank of ¦prince in 1817. The counts of Bentheim-Steinfurt did not issue any coinage, rather allowing that of Bentheim-Bentheim to circulate in their territory.

BENTHEIM-TECKLENBURG-RHEDA

The countship of Tecklenburg was located about halfway between the cities of Münster and Osnabrück in Westphalia and was acquired by Bentheim through marriage during the first half of the 13th century and the separate line of Bentheim-Tecklenburg was founded in 1269. The lordship of Rheda, to the southeast of Tecklenburg, was acquired by marriage in the mid-14th century. After the reunification of the 16th century, a new line of Bentheim-Tecklenburg-Rheda was founded in 1606. The county of Tecklenburg was lost to Solms in 1696, then sold to Prussia in 1707. Rheda was mediatized in 1805.

BERG

The history of Berg from 1423 until the early 19th century follows that of the united Jülich-Cleves-Berg. France occupied these territories in 1801 and by the order of Napoleon, transformed into the Grand Duchy of Berg for Joachim Murat in 1806. Two years later, Murat was made the King of Naples and Berg became part of the Kingdom of Westphalia. At the conclusion of the Napoleonic Wars, Berg and the other territories were joined to Prussia as its western province.

BERLIN

Located on the River Spree, Berlin was settled in the 12th century. It grew to become a major city and the capital of the margraviate and electorate of Brandenburg (see). It later was capital of the Kingdom of Prussia and finally, of the German Empire of 1871-1918 and the German Republic until 1945. Local coinage was struck for Berlin in the early period of the Thirty Years' War.

BESANCON

Besançon is located in Franche-Comté, 70 miles (116 kilometers) southwest of Mühlhausen in Alsace and almost the same distance west-northwest of Bern, Switzerland. This city was well known in Roman times as Vesontio and was first occupied by Julius Caesar in 58 B.C. An archbishopric was founded here in the 2nd century. The archbishops became princes of the empire ca.1288.

The city became a free imperial city in 1184 and soon came under the influence of the dukes of Burgundy, then of the imperial Hapsburgs and later within the Spanish sphere of influence after the abdication of Emperor Charles V in 1556. In 1678 it was formally ceded to France by the Peace of Nijmegen.

The normal devices employed on the city coinage are the city arms and a bust or figure of Emperor Charles V, even long after his death, because it was he who gave Besançon the mint right in 1526 and renewed it in 1534.

BLANKENBURG

A small countship centered on the town of the same name 8 miles (13.5 kilometers) southwest of Halberstadt, just on the northern flank of the Harz Mountains. The line of counts which had ruled from the late 11th century fell extinct in 1368. Lands and titles passed to the counts of Regenstein who also died out in 1599 (see Regenstein). Blankenburg and Regenstein were divided among Brunswick and Brandenburg. In the first half of the 18th century, a rather scarce and short-lived coinage issue was struck in the vicinity of the mines of the Brunswick portion which had been placed under the control of Duke Ludwig Rudolf of Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel and made a sovereign principality for him from 1714 to 1731.

BONN

A city on the west bank of the Rhine, 15 miles (25 Kilometers) south – Southeast of Cologne. Originally founded by the Romans and named Castra Bonnensia, it was the capital and a mint town of the elector-archbishops of Cologne (see). When the Elector Gebhard, Truchsess von Waldburg took a wife in Februar 1583, he was excommunicated and driven from office. In the course of these events, Bonn came under siege and was defended by Gebhard's brother, Karl, Truchsess von Waldburg. The affair became known as the Truchsessischen Krieg (the High Stewards' War) and forced the need to produce obsidional coinage. Bonn was besieged on a number of other occasions, once during the early period of the Thirty Years' War (1621-22) and then by the forces of Louis XIV in 1672-73. French occupation ended with a further siege in 1689, but one last investment of the city took place in 1703, during the War of the Spanish Succession. In 1801, Bonn was ceded to France, but was acquired by Prussia at the close of the Napoleonic Wars in 1815. After World War II, Bonn became the capital of West Germany, but lost that distinction upon the reunification of the country and the reinstatement of Berlin as the national capital.

BRANDENBURG CITY ISSUES

A city in the old margraviate of Brandenburg, originally the capital of the local pre-Christian Slavic tribe of the area. It is located on the Havel River 35 miles west-southwest of Berlin. It was the capital of the margraviate prior to Berlin. Some copper coins were issued during the early part of the Thirty Years' War for the Altstadt and Neustadt (old and new divisions of the city).

BRANDENBURG

The territory which was to become Brandenburg was inhabited by various Slavic tribes in the early Middle Ages. Charlemagne managed to diminish their power to some extent, but they regained their control after his passing. The Slav capital at Brennibor was captured by Emperor Heinrich I (918-36) and from that place Brandenburg takes its name. A series of margraves more or less continued to press the Slav tribes, but some were so ineffectual that the Slavs regained much of their former domains, especially after the death of Emperor Otto I (973). The early 12th century saw the return to active warfare against the Slavs. In 1134, the conquered lands were divided into the Altmark (Old or North Mark), west of the Elbe River, the Mittelmark (Middle Mark), between the Elbe and the Oder, and the Neumark (New Mark), east of the Oder River. Duke Lothar of Saxony appointed Albrecht the Bear of Ballenstädt as Margrave of the Nordmark (Altmark) and his long reign until 1170 brought stability to the lands under his control. The Ascanian rulers consolidated their power in Brandenburg and eventually obtained the electoral dignity in the 13th century. When the dynasty in Brandenburg became extinct, title passed to Emperor Ludwig III of Bavaria (1314-47), who made his eldest son ruler there. The margraviate continued to be ruled by members of the various imperial families or their appointees until the early 15th century. The Hohenzollerns of Swabia, who had been hereditary burgraves of Nürnberg since the late 12th century, acquired a mortgage on Brandenburg from the perpetually impecunious Emperor. In a stroke, Friedrich VI of Nürnberg became Elector Friedrich I of Brandenburg in 1415, thus placing the family into position to become rulers of the future most powerful state of the Empire.

Several of the Electors' sons ruled in the Hohenzollern possessions of Franconia (see Brandenburg in Franconia) and two founded the lines of Brandenburg-Ansbach and Brandenburg-Bayreuth (which see). Elector Johann Sigismund inherited the Duchy of Prussia in 1618 and the electorate was known henceforth as Brandenburg-Prussia. The Electorate sided with the Protestant cause during the Thirty Years' War, having submitted to the Reformation in 1539. The lessons of the war brought about the build-up of military power and territorial expansion under Friedrich Wilhelm, the Great Elector, which formed the basis of the Hohenzollerns' rise as a leading power in Europe. Johann Sigismund's great grandson assumed the title of King in Prussia in 1701 and the old margraviate of Brandenburg became just a province of the Kingdom. See Prussia for subsequent history and coin issues.

BRANDENBURG-FRANCONIA

(Brandenburg in Franken)

The Hohenzollerns of Swabia established their power as Burgraves of Nürnberg in the early 13th century. They soon acquired first Ansbach, then Bayreuth through marriage, becoming the most influential family in East Franconia, territories which extended from southwest to northeast between Swabia and Meissen. Various sons of the Brandenburg electors ruled portions of the Franconian holdings during the 15th century. Friedrich I, the younger brother of Elector Johann II Cicero (1486-99) established a permanent presence in Franconia in the late 15th century, becoming sole ruler there when Sigmund of Bayreuth and Kulmbach died in 1495. Friedrich I's descendants ruled jointly or separately during all of the 16th century, as well as supplying the Dukes of Prussia for much of the same period. When Friedrich I's grandson, Georg Friedrich, died childless in 1603, two younger sons of Elector Johann Georg were sent to rule as Margraves of Brandenburg-Ansbach and Brandenburg-Bayreuth. Georg Friedrich was Duke of Jägerndorf from 1543 and Administrator of Prussia from 1578. Coinage in his name for those places are listed therein.

BRANDENBURG-KÜSTRIN

Johann, the younger brother of Joachim II, Elector of Brandenburg, was given the Neumark to rule in his own right. The territory included Sternberg, Krossen, Cottbus and Küstrin, which became his principal seat. When Johann and Joachim II died in the same year, the Neumark-Küstrin enclave reverted to sole control of the new elector.

RULER

Johann (II), 1535-1571

BREISACH

(Breysach, Brisach)

The city of Breisach, located on the Rhine about 12.5 miles (21km) west-northwest of Freiburg, has been an inhabited place since ancient times. It was a Roman fortified town and was of such importance that the surrounding territory became known as the Breisgau. Acquired by Emperor Otto I in 939, Breisach was later the site of an imperial mint and became an imperial town in 1275. Breisach issued its own coinage from about the mid-14th until the late 16th centuries. However, a series of emergency coins were struck during the Thirty Years' War, when the imperial garrison was besieged by a Swedish army in 1633. The French ended up in possession of Breisach at the end of the war in 1648 and it was taken and retaken by them all during the latter half of the 17th century. The city was reunited to the Empire in 1697 and so remained until 1801, when Breisach and all of the Breisgau were acquired by the Duke of Modena. Breisach finally passed to Baden in 1805.

BREMEN

Established at about the same time as the bishopric in 787, Bremen was under the control of the bishops and archbishops until joining the Hanseatic League in 1276. Archbishop Albrecht II granted the mint right to the city in 1369, but this was not formalized by imperial decree until 1541. In 1646, Bremen was raised to free imperial status and continued to strike its own coins into the early 20th century. The city lost its free imperial status in 1803 and was controlled by France from 1806 until 1813. Regaining it independence in 1815, Bremen joined the North German Confederation in 1867 and the German Empire in 1871.

ARCHBISHOPRIC

A bishopric was established at the present site of Bremen by St. Wilhad in 787. When the Norse destroyed Hamburg in 848, the archbishop of that city transferred his see to Bremen. Eventually, the connection between the two waned and Bremen remained the seat of an archbishop, which obtained the mint right as early as 888. During the 11th century, this right was extended to allow mints to be established in various towns under Bremen's control. The Protestant Reformation overtook Bremen in 1522, although Catholic episcopal princes attempted to maintain Rome's influence there. At the start of the Thirty Years' War in 1618, however, Protestantism was firmly entrenched in Bremen. The last archbishop was driven from his see by the Swedes in 1644 and Bremen was joined to Verden as a secular duchy (see Bremen and Verden). This arrangement was confirmed by the Peace of Westphalia in 1648.

FREE CITY

Established at about the same time as the bishopric in 787, Bremen was under the control of the bishops and archbishops until joining the Hanseatic League in 1276. Archbishop Albrecht II granted the mint right to the city in 1369, but this was not formalized by imperial decree until 1541. In 1646, Bremen was raised to free imperial status and continued to strike its own coins into the early 20th century. The city lost its free imperial status in 1803 and was controlled by France from 1806 until 1813. Regaining it independence in 1815, Bremen joined the North German Confederation in 1867 and the German Empire in 1871.

TOKEN COINAGE

Reckoning Tokens

These vouchers, issued March 18, 1924, were based on the American dollar. Issued in conjunction with Bremens issue of treasury. Due to monies being held to purchase Bremens 5% Dollar Bond, they rarely circulated. The tokens were withdrawn September 30 of that same year.

COUNTERMARKED COINAGE

1620-1621

A countermark of the city arms - a key - was used to identify some coins which circulated in the city. The precise reason for the use of this countermark is not known, but it is interesting to note that it occurs on double-schilling type coins during the very early period of the Thirty Years' War. Its use may be related to a new monetary ordinance agreed to among the cities of Bremen, Hamburg, Lubeck, and the duchies of Mecklenburg-Schwerin and Mecklenburg-Strelitz dated 20 April 1620.

BREMEN & VERDEN

The Archbishopric of Bremen and the Bishopric of Verden (which see) were taken by Sweden during the Thirty Years' War and joined together as a secular duchy. This action by Sweden was confirmed as part of the Peace of Westphalia which brought an end to the war in 1648. The King of Sweden was also entitled as Duke of Bremen and Verden. Except for a brief period of Danish rule (1702-04), Sweden continued its rule over the duchy until 1719, at which time it was transferred to the Electorate of Hanover.

BRESLAU

One of the chief cities of Silesia, Breslau is the present day Wroclaw in Poland, 135 miles (225 kilometers) east of Dresden and 200 miles (330 kilometers) southwest of Warsaw. The site was settled in the early 10th century and a bishopric was soon established in close proximity to the town. The bishop was made a Prince of the Empire in 1290 and he obtained the right to coin money at the same time. The fortunes of the bishopric closely followed those of the city. The portion of territory which came into the possession of Prussia was secularized in 1810.

CITY

After its founding in the early 10th century, Breslau was subject to Poland until it became the capital of the Duchy of Middle Silesia in 1163. Duke Heinrich VI gave the already semi-autonomous city the mint right in 1318. Breslau came under the rule of Bohemia in 1360 and for most of the time up until 1526 maintained some semblance of independence. In that year, all of Bohemia and Silesia became Habsburg domains, but as a result of a war with Prussia, Breslau was ceded to the latter in 1741. A city coinage was struck until about the early 18th century, and a Prussian mint operated in Breslau from about 1750 until the late 19th century.

BRUNSWICK

FREE CITY

The city of Brunswick (German: Braunschweig) is located on the Oker River in northern Germany, 37 miles (62 kilometers) southeast of Hannover and 53 miles (88 kilometers) northwest of Magdeburg. Founded about 861 by Bruno of Saxony, the town became an important place in the late Middle Ages and was an early member of the Hanseatic League. The dukes of Brunswick made the city their early capital and never relinquished their control completely. The city was granted the right to produce its own coins, however, first in 1296 and reiterated in 1345. The municipal coinage was produced in considerable quantities during the 16th and most of the 17th centuries. Brunswick became a Protestant enclave during the Reformation and suffered during the Thirty Years' War. It was included in the Kingdom of Westphalia from 1807 until 1813. In 1834, Brunswick gained its independence from the duke and enjoyed self-rule from that point onwards into the modern age.

BRUNSWICK DUCHIES

Braunschweig

The earliest rulers of Brunswick, in north-central Germany, were the Brunon dukes of Saxony, who controlled the territory from about 1000AD. By 1137, the dynasty died out in the male line and Brunswick passed in marriage to the Welf Duke of Bavaria, Heinrich I the Proud (1136-39). His son, Heinrich II the Lion (1139-95), ruled all of Bavaria, Saxony and Brunswick, but lost control of all his territories except Brunswick in 1180. This, then was the beginning of the rule of the Welf dynasty over the lands of Brunswick which would last until 1918. Over the centuries, many acquisitions and divisions of territory took place and one branch of the dynasty even became kings of Great Britain.

Lüneburg – lion rampant left, often surrounded by many small hearts
Unter-Diepholz – heraldic eagle, head left, wings spread

NOTE: Additionally, the symbol for all Welf lands, invoking the memory of the dynasty's rule over Lower Saxony, was the leaping Saxon horse, usually found as a crest above helmets and shields of arms.

BRUNSWICK-BEVERN

Branch of the house of Brunswick founded in 1666 by Ferdinand Albrecht I, son of August II of Brunswick-Dannenberg. At the death of Ferdinand Albrecht II in 1735, his eldest son maintained the Wolfenbüttel line and a younger son maintained the Bevern line. After 1735 Bevern was closely associated with Prussian policy. With the extinction of the line in 1809 properties reverted to Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel.

BRUNSWICK-BLANKENBURG

A county located in the Harz Mountains to the southwest of Halberstadt, Blankenburg was established in the late 11th century. The line was divided into Blankenburg and Regenstein in 1162 and, when Blankenburg became extinct in 1368, its lands and titles reverted to Regenstein. In 1599, Regenstein itself became extinct and both titles fell to Brunswick. A short-lived separate line for Blankenburg was established from Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel in the early 18th century for which coins were issued.

BRUNSWICK-CALENBERG

When Wilhelm IV of Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel abdicated in 1495, his two sons divided the patrimony. The elder son established the line of Brunswick-Calenberg, while his younger brother retained the duchy of Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel. Erich III issued some coinage jointly with his cousin, Heinrich of Wolfenbüttel. The elder line died out after the second generation and reverted to Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel.

RULERS

Erich II der Ältere, 1495-1540
Erich III der Jüngere, 1540-1584
Under regency of his mother, 1540-1545
Joint coinage with Heinrich der Jüngere of Wolfenbüttel, 1551-1556

BRUNSWICK-DANNENBERG

Established upon the division of Brunswick-Lüneburg-Celle in 1559, but only remained a separate entity for two generations. Upon the death of Julius Ernst in 1636, it was joined by his son with the domains of Hitzacker and Wolfenbüttel to form a much enlarged Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel.

RULERS
Heinrich X, 1559-1598
Julius Ernst, 1598-1636
August II the Younger, in district of Hitzacker, 1604-1635

BRUNSWICK-GRUBENHAGEN-HERZBERG-OSTERODE

Originally part of the duchy of Brunswick-Grubenhagen which was divided into Brunswick-Grubenhagen-Osterode and Brunswick-Grubenhagen-Salzderhelden in 1361. When Osterode became extinct in 1452, it reverted to Salzderhelden which itself was divided in 1427 to form Brunswick-Grubenhagen-Salzderhelden and Brunswick-Grubenhagen-Herzberg-Osterode. When Grubenhagen-Salzderhelden ended without an heir in 1526, its lands and territories were joined to Grubenhagen-Herzberg-Osterode. The latter line fell extinct in 1596 and all territories were absorbed by Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel.

BRUNSWICK-GRUBENHAGEN-SALZDERHELDEN

The duchy of Brunswick-Grubenhagen had been divided into Brunswick-Grubenhagen-Osterode and Brunswick-Grubenhagen-Salzderhelden in 1361, but the latter was further divided in 1427 to establish the lines of Brunswick-Grubenhagen-Herzberg-Osterode and Brunswick-Grubenhagen-Salzderhelden. In 1526, Salzderhelden became extinct and its lands and titles reverted to Herzberg-Osterode.

BRUNSWICK-HITZACKER

This subdivision of Brunswick-Dannenberg, centered on the town of the same name located on the Elbe Riveer just 4 miles (7 km) north-northwest of Dannenberg, was administered separately by one ruler in the early 17th century. It returned to the general governance of Dannenberg a year before the latter was united to Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel.

RULER
August II der Jüngere, 1604-1635

BRUNSWICK-LUNEBURG-CALENBERG

The duchy of Brunswick-Lüneburg-Calenberg was established as a division of Brunswick-New-Lüneburg in 1636. It was further divided into Brunswick-Lüneburg-Calenberg and Brunswick-Lüneburg-Celle in 1648. In 1692 the duke was raised to the rank of elector and the principality became known as the Electorate of Brunswick-Lüneburg-Calenberg-Hannover. After the Napoleonic Wars, Hannover became a kingdom in 1814 and passed to Prussia in 1866.

BRUNSWICK-LUNEBURG-CALENBERG-HANNOVER

Located in north-central Germany. The first duke began his rule in 1235. The first coinage appeared c. 1175. There was considerable shuffling of territory until 1692 when Ernst August became the elector of Hannover. George Ludwig became George I of England in 1714. There was separate coinage for Lüneburg until during the reign of George III. The name was changed to Hannover in 1814.

RULERS
George Ludwig (George I of England), 1698-1727
George II August (George II of England), 1727-1760
George III, (King of Great Britain), 1760-1814
After 1814 see Kingdom of Hannover
